

That's not what i meant, sorry it came across like that. I was speaking in general about leavingchild with a stranger ashml --- 1 hours ago - quote - hide comments

I remember how he manipulated people into feeling sorry for him being a male babysitter facing discrimination. I hope he'll rott in hell that sick bastard!

yeah I emailed him for my son at the time 14 months old...when I talked to him something in my stomch turned and something in my head just screamed NO!!! Then 3-4 months later someone emailed me asking if he watched my child...I told them no but I was about to...and thats when they said good because he was arrested for molesting children...then I knew...to this day I am so very glad whatever was telling me no...did because well we would be in the same boat as a lot of families. Poor kids...the only comfort I take into this that he will be getting what he dished out...2 fold...

and btw I always tr to get to know my childs possible "babysitter" could chats with this guy...and I just had that feeling...now my sons have a wonderful babysitter who is by far not a stranger and she is more like a friend now because I made sure to get to know her etc....

k --- 1 hours ago - quote - hide comments

Yeah, I don't think anyone was blaming parents. Obviously if he was asked for references there were some parents asking the right questions. It's just scary that even with references and research this kind of thing can still happen. My heart goes out to the kids and the parents. The parents are victims, too.

Fran --- 1 hours ago - quote - hide comments

He yelled way too loud about being a great babysitter and whatnot to be innocent. He wrote a god darn essay about how great he is.

I bet some parents hired him because he manipulated them into feeling bad for him. I rather offend 10 people by saying I won't hire a male babysitter than take the chance at what surfaced now. He's been babysitting since he was 13. Can you imagine how many victims are still out there?

MotherOf2 --- 1 hours ago - quote - hide comments